DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

THAT where people buy and sell they buy depend upon the advertisements they read.

THAT a business concern that wishes to attract business must make itself attractive to those who have money to spend. No business exists in the minds of the public unless it is constantly telling them what they have for sale.

THAT quality, well advertised, is always in popular demand. This is especially because quality is selling in greater volume every year.

THAT persistent advertising maintains present business and assures future business.

THAT well advertised merchandise is better for sale; therefore, better to sell or buy.

THAT business concerns are judged to a great extent by the merchandise they offer for sale.

THAT it is always best to carry well advertised lines in stock and advertise that fact locally.

THAT successful business concerns are the greatest asset any community can have.

Advertising through the printed page is the best, cheapest, and surest way for business concerns to tell who they are, where they are and what they have for sale.

"Mother!" he exclaimed. "I began to think pr'aps I'd missed you."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY G. C. TRUMBULL.

(Editor of The Sunday School Times.)

PAUL'S EXPERIENCES IN JERUSALEM.

Sunday, Nov. 18.—Acts 21:17 to 23:35.

Golden Text—Be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might. (Eph. 6:10).

Our lesson continues from the point where we left Paul three Sundays ago, when we studied his last journey to Jerusalem. He was received by the brethren there, and a series of strange experiences followed.

We saw from the Scriptures that Paul evidently mistook God's guidance when he insisted on going to Jerusalem. He went contrary to the revealed word of the Holy Spirit. (Acts 21:4.) And now almost his first act after reaching Jerusalem is to listen to the mistaken counsel of Jewish Christians there, who urge him to "stand in" with the Judaizers and try to clear his reputation by taking a Jewish vow and offering a Jewish sacrifice. This seems unthinkable, from the chosen apostle, to whom was revealed the full meaning of grace and the Gospel, and the sufficiency and finality of the sacrifice of the Lamb of God. Paul had already written the Epistle to the Galatians, with its glorious declaration: "There is neither Jew nor Greek.....for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.....Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." (Gal. 3:28; 5:1.)

But this Jewish vow and sacrifice Paul did not, apparently, alter the savage opposition of the Jews. His seven days of ceremonial purification were not ended when an open attack was made upon him in the temple. The whole city was aroused. Paul was dragged out of the temple, and lynch law would have taken his life had he not been rescued by the Roman chief captain and his soldiers.

Then the Lord gave Paul an exceptional opportunity to proclaim the Gospel in Jerusalem before an immense audience of Jews and Gentiles. The chief captain, hearing his identity as "a citizen of no mean city," let him speak from the castle stairs to the crowd.

It was one of the great orations of the Bible, and that means of all history and literature. In cultured Hebrew, which commanded silence as the Jewish crowd listened in respect, Paul told his life story. He showed his zeal for the law of God, concerning which he was then under suspicion. He told his record as a persecutor of Christians. Then he told of his sight of the Lord Jesus Christ on the way to Damascus, and of his instantaneous conversion. Fearlessly he told how his sins had been washed away as he was baptized and called on the name of the Lord. But when he came to his commission, in which the Lord told him he must be sent "far hence unto the Gentiles," that was too much for his Jewish hearers. They shouted: "Away with such a fellow from the earth; for it is not fit that he should live."

So he was taken into the castle by his Roman captor to be scourged and examined. But Paul's quiet question, "Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?" startled the centurion and the chief captain. The scourging was omitted, the prisoner was treated with proper respect, and was brought before the Jewish Sanhedrin, their highest council.

The Apostle, knowing that some of the council were Sadducees, who denied any resurrection, and others Pharisees, or orthodox Jewish believers, made the challenging statement: "Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." A great cry from the council was the response; the Pharisees at once took Paul's part, while the Sadducees turned against their fellows in the council. The chief captain, fearing for Paul's life, had the soldiers take him by force from the excited religionists, and he was again imprisoned in the castle.

One of the great prison experiences of history followed, as the Lord Jesus appeared to him the next night and said: "Be of good cheer, Paul, for as thou has testified of Me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome." Whatever mistakes in guidance or action Paul may have made, the Lord Jesus Christ stood by him. Our Saviour's love and protection do not depend upon our perfection, but upon His. Paul could have no doubt after this that he would live to see Rome and preach there.

But more than forty Jews took an oath, binding themselves, under a curse, neither to eat nor to drink until they had killed Paul. They planned to ask the chief captain to bring Paul to the council the following day, and they would kill him on the way. This was foiled by Paul's nephew hearing of it; he went to his uncle in person and told him, and Paul's advice, went straight to the chief captain and told him the story.

It did not take the Roman military commander long to decide. He believed in fair play, and he was interested in this prisoner. Before the next day dawned he had started his prisoner on the way to the Roman Governor at Caesarea under an escort of two hundred soldiers, seventy cavalrymen and two hundred spearmen. With them he sent an official letter to Felix, setting forth the facts about this Roman citizen prisoner, and committing him to his charge.

It is to be doubted whether the forty conspirators starved to death when they found they could not keep their vow by killing Paul.

State Property In France.

An inventory which has recently been completed of the property owned by the French state estimates the total value at $5,200,000,000. It would be difficult to realize on a large proportion of the property. There is the Palace of Versailles, for instance, which, perhaps none could buy. It is listed at $240,000,000.

At the other end of the list, however, are properties which could be acquired at a very modest outlay. Among the Roman ruins in Tunisia figures an item priced at ten francs, on two cents. The Palace of Fontainebleau is valued at $4,315,000 and the Elysee, the President's abode, $2,213,000 and the Forest of Fontainebleau, with over 40,000 acres of timber, at $20,000,000.

"PINKHAM'S COMPOUND IS WONDERFUL"

Vanessa, Ont.—"I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is wonderful. I have had six children of which four are living and my youngest is a bonnie baby boy eight months old who weighs 28 pounds. I have taken your medicine before each of them and have certainly received great benefit from it. I urge my friends to take it as I am sure they will receive the same help I did."—Mrs. Milton McMullen, Vanessa, Ontario.

SELECTING THE BREEDING MALE

(Experimental Farms Note.)

It may seem a little early in the season to talk of selecting next spring's breeders, but this is of such importance that it must be borne in mind early in the season, if best results are to be secured.

Early in the growing season the poultryman should have marked "for the flock" all those chickens that had shown the character for slow feathering or any constitutional weakness. These will thus be reserved for breeders, only cockerels from high laying dams that have laid large eggs.

This latter is of great importance as there is unquestionably a tendency to diminution in the size of the egg, where selection has been followed for high production, without due care to also select for size of eggs.

During the latter part of the summer and early fall it will have been noticed that there were some cockerels that had developed sexually very early. These cockerels almost invariably finish up as "ponies." In other words, although they look large early in the season, they become set in their growth, and do not make birds of normal size at maturity. Cockerels of that kind should not be retained as breeders, as their offspring will have a tendency to mature in the same manner. They will lay early, before they reach proper body growth, and consequently lay small eggs throughout life.

To summarize, the breeding male should be the son of a high laying, large egg hen. He should be well grown, of good size for his breed, and above all should be vigorous. While vigor may be denoted in every part of the bird, in the broad back-deep body, the well set legs and general action, and in the nervous force, the paramount requirement in any breeding male, is indicated by the bright, prominent, piercing eye set in a clean cut face.

This is the kind of male that will give results.

The Lord Nelson at Halifax

Citizens of Halifax take very justifiable pride in the fact that in bringing to fruition their dream of a new modern hotel, they have created a beautiful hostelry which, while still too new to have many valued associations, has an atmosphere redolent of those days of grace in which their city had its beginnings. The Lord Nelson, but recently opened, has a charm not usually associated with a modern institution of its kind and a decided nautical touch. The grill, for instance, is named the "Ward Room," and as one sees the sailor suited waitresses moving about the tables one half expects to hear the "Ship Ahoy," or "Light on the starb'd bow, sir." Lanterns help to foster the ship-board illusion, and, one of these lanthorns, pictured above, has very close associations with the sea. When Lord Nelson lay dying in the cockpit of H.M.S. Victory, while the great old ship heaved in the rollers off Cape Trafalgar on October 21, 1805, this lamp illuminated the scene as the doctors strove to save a life the loss of which was one of England's greatest.

A bust of Nelson, an original from the Royal Naval Institute at Greenwich, and an exceptionally fine piece of work, stands in a corner of the lounge, facing a model of his flagship. In the main dining room, too, a very fine oil shows the admiral on deck and his men running up a signal of victory.

The Lord Nelson is, however, a little more than an art centre. It is a very modern hotel of 200 rooms facing the Halifax Public Gardens. Its public and convention rooms are exceptionally well planned and appointed. The design is Georgian, simple and beautiful. While it has been built as the result of a co-operative effort, the Lord Nelson is operated by the hotel department of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which company has considerable interest in it. It will, therefore, compare very favorably in service and all essentials with the great Chateaus and other hotels of the company.

Here and There

The Canadian Pacific has decided on a new ferry service between Steveston, on the mainland, and Sydney, on Vancouver Island, according to Captain C. D. Newcombe, manager of the B. C. Coast Steamship Service. The new service will begin early next summer, being inspired by the increased demand for short water hauls.

Tourists to Victoria, the capital of British Columbia, this year numbered 270,000, according to the Victoria Publicity Bureau. Tourist travel from Canadian points and from the west coast of the United States to Vancouver Island and Victoria, via the C. P. R. and the coastal steamship service, show an increase over last year.

New York newspaper cameramen want cow-boys to do their stuff on the parapets of sky scrapers and are not content with ordinary cowboy traits, was the somewhat bitter observation of Guy Weadick, manager of the Calgary Stampede, who returned to Canada recently from participating in Tex Rickard's radio in Madison Square Garden, New York. "Some wanted real cowboys for photographs," he said, "and we had to lasso policemen from the top of busses on Fifth Avenue to get them."

Grain storage facilities of the harbor of Vancouver, B.C., which now exceed 10,000,000 bushels, will be largely increased next season, it is believed, in view of the fact that storage bins are already nearly full and the westward flow of grain may have to be reduced in consequence. It is being reported currently that the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Midland-Pacific Terminals and other groups will add storage capacity to existing terminal houses.

Over 175,000 trees have been planted along the main highways of the province of Quebec during the past two years by the Roads Department, in following out its embellishment scheme, which includes co-operation from residents along the roads. "Since the beginning of the season," states an official bulletin, "the Minister of Roads has been insisting on the importance of beautifying roadsides. Tourists can now travel throughout the province on modern and perfectly maintained roads."

"Canary Kordyke Alcartra," Holstein-Friesian cow belonging to the herd of Ben. H. Thompson of Boharm, Saskatchewan, has been declared world's champion butter-fat producer, according to an advice received by the owner from the live stock commissioner at Ottawa, stating that the cow has won the world championship with an enormous margin to spare. The record of Canary Kordyke Alcartra for 305 days was 1,080 pounds of butter-fat, or 196 pounds more than any previous record holder. In the 305-day period the cow produced 26,396 pounds of milk with an average test of 4.04 butter-fat.

There is no doubt in the mind of L. S. Lyons, of New York, of the New York Central Railway, as to whether moose will attack human beings. Although the subject is a controversial one among big game hunters, decisive testimony was afforded recently in the experience of Mr. James in the Metagama district, lying between Sudbury and Chapleau in Northern Ontario. He was paddling in his canoe along the shore of the Spanish River and came upon a bull moose unawares. The animal at once gave chase and only by dint of hard paddling by Pete Commanda, the Indian guide, were they able to escape. Another canoe in rear was similarly pursued.

WHY HONEY SHOULD BE GRADED

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Honey is one of the few uncooked, pure and natural foods in its class that remains. But because it is too frequently allowed to go to the market in an unclassified or ungraded manner, it is often overlooked by the purchaser.

Since there are so many different kinds of honeys, and so many individual tastes, it is important that when buying honey, the purchaser should know what he or she is getting.

For example, buckwheat is a table honey, is disliked by many people, while on the other hand, many people prefer it to any other. It is perfectly good honey but it does not suit the palate in some cases. The only way to make sure that the purchaser is getting what is liked best, is to have the quality or grade marked on the container.

Because in these days so much of the food-stuff consumed is graded and labelled, any commodity such as honey, that is not graded, is frequently overlooked by the housewife when purchasing her provisions. When purchasing a can of peaches, one can see the quality marked on the label, or when buying jams one can see the kind clearly marked on the label, leaving no doubt in ones mind concerning the quality of such purchases. When it comes to buying honey, unless it be graded—and much of it is not —one must make a stab in the dark, hoping that it will prove to be good white clover (should that happen to be the kind preferred). Now if honey were to be graded, the purchaser would be assisted in making his choice of kinds. Furthermore, he soon gets to know what kind he prefers, and will return for more.

Asphaltic Oil.

A new industry got under way in Regina a few days ago when there was erected a $25,000 plant by the Imperial Oil Company. It is for the manufacture of asphaltic oil, being used for waterproofing gumbo roads in Saskatchewan and also of asphalt for paving and other purposes. The new plant has a capacity of between 200 and 400 barrels of asphaltic oil per day.

The happy merchant

Never before in the history of the world has it been possible for a merchant in good credit to do so much business with so little capital locked up in stock.

One important reason for the present prosperity is, that instead of having to buy a big stock at the beginning of each season, he is now able to buy small stocks and replenish them promptly by Long Distance.

Keep your customers for miles around coming to you for whatever they need. Invent ways of inducing them to visit your store, or to order from you by Long Distance and — they tell us —you find it will be easily bothered by competition.

Long Distance is making happy merchants in some towns. Don't overlook its great possibilities.

A HUGE DESERT LINER

Ship of Sahara Will Carry 150 Passengers and 200 Tons of Freight.

"The ship of the desert," the slow, immemorial camel, which has carried men and merchandise over earth's dreary steppes and sandy wastes for long ages, has, of recent years, had its supremacy slightly threatened here and there by the desert-going motor car and by the airplane.

But car and plane can transport only a few people, and very small quantities of goods.

If there were all that engineering science could offer to conquer desert ways for travel and trade, then the patient, picturesque, camel-caravan would not be likely to disappear for a considerable time yet.

Engineers, however, have of late been facing the problem of transporting over the world's inhospitable regions where railways would be expensive luxuries, and now the first "desert liner" is about to be "launched."

This new and gigantic "ship of the desert" is really a sort of Nile steamer or barge, designed to go where there are no rails or roads and to carry a substantial "passenger list" as well as many tons of goods.

It is to be 150 feet in length, nearly 30 feet broad, and 42 feet high. The great 50-foot wheels are "corged," so as to grip perfectly, and the "liner" will be driven by two 450 h.p. motors.

It will have a "cruising speed" of 15 miles an hour, and strong searchlights will enable it to travel by night. While the flattest routes will naturally be chosen, it is believed it will be possible for it to negotiate inclines up to 30 degrees.

It is to have four decks. On the topmost will be the "bridge" and the accommodation for the commander and his staff, together with a long "promenade deck."

The two decks below will be occupied by the cabins for the passengers, the dining-room, the lounge, the reading and smoking rooms, the kitchen and the "hold" for the travellers' luggage.

On the lowest deck will be goods, motors, oil tanks, etc.

The "liner" will be electrically lighted and will carry a wireless installation. It is designed to carry 150 passengers and 200 tons of merchandise, while its radius of continuous travel will be between three and four thousand miles.

It will most likely be launched on the "shores" of the Sahara Desert for its maiden voyage to Timbuctoo.

KLEECED IN SHOE DEAL.

South Sea Islanders Duped Into Purchase at Tokyo.

A party of twenty-four South Sea Islanders from the islands under Japanese mandate arrived in Tokio recently on a eight-seeing tour of the country. It was their first trip away from their native habitat. They were barefooted when they arrived third-class on a Japan-ese vessel at Yokohama.

Among the petty dealers who met the ship was a shoe salesman who soon convinced the entire party as well as their guardians that they would need shoes before they had gone very far in Japan. Orders were taken for twenty-four pairs, and without measurements the entire lot was delivered on the ship before they disembarked. The natives succeeded in donning the shoes, but by the time they had walked the distance from the pier to the railway station to come to Tokio they were howling with pain. It was the first time they had worn shoes, and their new footgear, in addition, was ill-fitting and misshapen. To a man, the natives on boarding the train took off their shoes and refused to wear them again while they were in Tokio.

Highest-Paid Sports-Girl.

The highest-paid sports-girl in the world is Miss Aileen Riggin, of New York, who earns $15,000 a year for a six-hour week—nearly $50 an hour. Miss Riggin is an exhibition diver, twenty-one years old, whose "twists" and "jack-knives" are famous at Miami beach and other American pleasure resorts.

Miss Riggin is visiting Britain, South Africa and Australia.

Tattooing Expensive In Samoa.

The art of tattooing still flourishes in the Samoan islands where the native tattoo their bodies from the hips to the knees. A tattooer's profession is very lucrative. His instruments resemble combs, and are made of human bones of different sizes. The operation takes from two to three months, during which time the patient remains in the same retired place. All this time the relatives of the young person brings mats, money and food, but if the quantity does not suit the tatooer, he "goes on strike," refusing to proceed until sufficient liberality is displayed. The requisite gifts are sure to be brought, for no Samoan could endure going half tattooed.

Romance In Ruins.

Ruins of vast buildings, statues, and other signs of a once prosperous civilization have been found on Easter Island, in the middle of the Pacific Ocean. No one lives there now.

A French oceanographer, who has just completed a study of this desolate spot declares that the island in the tip of a mountain peak, all that is left of a once thriving island continent, which sank beneath the waves ages ago.

This highest peak was probably the site of a temple before it was swallowed by the sea in one of the world's most frightful tragedies.

1,825,581 Autos Scrapped.

A total of 1,825,581 automobiles went on the U. S. scrap heap last year. New York contributed 149,373, the largest number. Pennsylvania was second with 135,378; the Michigan with 119,796.

Olive's Courtship

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY

Author of "A Cruel Revenge," "A Forbidden Marriage," "A Beautiful Coquette," "The Heiress of Cameron Hall"

Despite the firm pressure of Glendenning's fingers closing over her own, the girl trembled. It was a solemn thing, this marriage ceremony. How blue the sky looked through the network of green leaves, and how green the grass was beneath her feet, with its nodding daisies and harebells and timid buttercups. It seemed to take the old minister ages to adjust his spectacles, open the sacred Book, and find the place. And in the interim how the face of the heavens changed. The sun hid his face behind a cloud and the light of the summer day darkened; the wind sighed among the branches of the trees, like spirits in distress; a bird that was twittering but a moment since on a bough over her head flew off with a startled cry. But neither the cloud, nor the wind, nor the bird warned the girl that she was taking a step in life she would rue in anguish more bitter than death during all the years of her after life.

"Make haste if you please, good sir," exclaimed Glendenning, impatiently. "It is blowing up for a storm and it will be set in upon us before we can reach home."

"The knot will be tied as quickly as it can be done, sir," replied the minister, who had by this time found the place in his book.

Five minutes, and the words were uttered which could never be unsaid, and Neva, fair, innocent Neva, was the lawfully wedded wife of Glendenning. Then the old man drew from his pocket a package of marriage certificates and proceeded to fill one out.

"I have so many affairs of this kind to attend to as I travel about from village to village that I always carry them about with me nowadays," he explained.

Here, again, an unexpected dilemma presented itself. Oscar Glendenning was obliged to give the name of Roger instead of his own. For an instant he had hesitated when the question of name came up.

"It can not matter in point of law whether I say Roger or Oscar," he said to himself. "It is the man my little Neva is marrying, not the name. I can straighten all that out later in explaining the matter to her." He did not wish to startle her by mentioning it at that all-important epoch of their lives. And upon this one point, dear reader, rests all the sorrow of the girl's future. Only a few words! Ah! how much they mean to the two standing there. Then the old minister pronounced them man and wife until death did them part.

"May you have a happy life, of it," he added, placing his trembling hand upon the girl's dark head. She thanked him through her happy tears. The certificate was duly made out and handed to her, and he watched them as, hand in hand, they turned from him a length and walked down the magnolia-bordered road together—watched them until a bend in the road hid them from his view.

"May Heaven find pardon for the thought, but I do not quite like his face," he muttered, as he mounted his horse and rode slowly away in an opposite direction. "The girl is like a mountain snow-drop, with a soul as pure and white, while he is of the world, worldly to the heart's core. Nature never makes a mistake in her handwriting on the human face and father marked that man for a criminal or a great genius. I hardly know which, handsome as polished though he be. I must remember to send in the record of this marriage to the county clerk when I reach the next village. I would make a note of it in my memorie, age to adjust his spectacles, open the sacred Book, and find the place. And in the interim how the face of the heavens changed. The sun hid his face behind a cloud and the light of the summer day darkened; the wind sighed among the branches of the trees, like spirits in distress; a bird that was twittering but a moment since on a bough over her head flew off with a startled cry. I must remember to send in the record of this marriage to the county clerk when I reach the next village. I would make a note of it in my memorie, lest she did not realize then, but she knew afterward, why the girl ran to her, flung her white arm around her neck, covering her face with kisses and tears.

"Such an experience as we have had a little while ago!" began Mrs. Gray, excitedly. "Three constables from the next county were in the house. They were on a search for some fugitive whom they have been tracking down for over two months. He is somewhere hereabouts, they say. Ugh! it makes me shudder even to think of it. Why, with such men prowling about we are not safe from being murdered in our beds any night. I shall have all the doors kept in the house after this night."

Glendenning listened like one dazed. There was no doubt in his mind but that he was the fugitive they were hunting down.

"Did they mention the name of the man they were looking for?" he asked with white lips, speaking with difficulty.

"No. They did mention, however, that it was useless to call him by any name, for, ten chances to one he went under an assumed one."

"Did they describe him?" asked Glendenning, still in that unearthly, hoarse voice.

"Yes, they inquired minutely of one of the farm-hands, for every one else about the house was at the far end of the orchard. He does not understand good English and did not understand half the questions they asked of him. They rode on, but will be back this way to-morrow. He caught that much of their conversation."

Glendenning's face had turned as ghastly white as he listened, but he did not utter a word lest his voice should betray his emotion. A little later he came to Neva as she was clearing away the supper dishes alone in the wide, cool farm kitchen.

"I must have a word with you, Neva," he said, hoarsely. "I—I—am called suddenly away from here. One of the farmers in the village is going over to the village has consented to take me. I must go."

He saw the words strike her as lightning strikes a fair flower. The glass she held in her hand fell from her nerveless fingers and crashed to a thousand pieces on the floor.

"You are going to leave me, Roger?" she breathed, faintly, trembling like a leaf in a bitter, swirling storm.

"Listen to the rest, Neva," he said. "You are to join me. I have planned it all out. Here is the money for your ticket. You are to buy it straight through to New Yeddo, and I will be waiting at the depot to meet you. Do not leave a note. You shall write back immediately and tell them we are married, and that you have forsaken all to cling to me and follow my fortunes. Believe me, my darling, he will soon be forgiven. You must start tomorrow night from Hempden village. The train for New Yeddo leaves there at three o'clock in the morning. You will be obliged to take that."

"Oh, Roger!" she sobbed hysterically, clinging to him, "it breaks my heart to leave home! I—"

"It must be as you wish, Neva," he said, gravely. "Your will must be my law. If you prefer to remain here a few months until I can return for you, I—I—am forced to consent, much as such a decision would disappoint me."

"My place is by your side, Roger," sobbed the girl. "I must do what you think best. I—I—will join you at the place you spoke of, and my earnest prayer will be that father and mother will forgive me."

He took her in his arms and kissed her lips. It touched him to see how blindly and implicitly she trusted him. And she was the only one in the wide, wide world to believe in him. He held her reverently in his arms one little moment, the young bride and groom he had just wedded, and from whom fate was parting him, but he contented himself by saying that the parting would be but for a few short hours. That was the first and last caress Oscar Glendenning ever gave her. Looking from the window he saw that the farmer, who was awaiting his coming, was growing impatient, and from the next room he heard the footsteps of Neva's mother rapidly approaching. Glendenning had barely time to release her ere the mother entered.

"Good-bye," he said, extending his hand to the girl.

"Good-bye," she murmured, striving hard to keep back her tears. And, with a lingering glance, he turned, then walked rapidly from the room and from the house.

CHAPTER XI.

The long day drew to a close at last, and it seemed to Neva as though long years of desolation had passed over her young head.

It almost seemed to her as though the very thought that he had gone away was some horrible dream which she could shake off and awake from presently.

How dreary the house seemed! Every hour in the day she found herself listening for his step or his voice. Then darkness fell, and fell, the girl crept to her lonely room, threw herself upon her couch, and cried herself to sleep, and in her dreams she again haunted her. Ah, dear Heaven, how lonely it was without him!

Every one noticed Neva's depression, and attributed it at once to the departure of handsome, graceful Glendenning.

"We got rid of him just in time," remarked Farmer Gray to his wife, the next day. "Little Neva was growin', powerful fond o' that chap."

"I saw that absent a fortnight ago, and it troubled me. I like not your," returned his wife. "He was very bright, but I think goodness he has gone for good. She will mope a little while, no doubt, but she is very young, and she will soon forget him."

"I tell you what, wife, it don't do to bring these handsome city chaps in one's home, especially what a man's got a susceptible young daughter," said Farmer Gray, as he puffed vigorously at his pipe. "This here experience has learned me a lesson that I'll be apt to profit by, I'll allow."

The long day drew to a close, as all days must, and night drew her sable curtain, and pinned them with a star.

Every one at the farm-house retired early; it seemed long hours at that, from nine o'clock at night until four in the morning.

Neva gave her father and mother such a hysterical hugging and kissing, when she bade them goodnight, that they wondered at it.

"Poor child! she's worried still over the going of Glendenning," muttered the farmer, brushing a tear from his eye as the door closed after her. He was not concerning the matter to his wife, lest the affair might trouble her mind. "It will soon all pass away," she muttered the farmer, and, still thinking over the matter, he dropped off into an uneasy sleep.

By the time the old clock in the sitting-room struck ten, every light was out save one—the candle which burned faintly in Neva's room under the eaves.

But Neva was not the only one who was restless beneath that roof that night.

John Anderson, the farm-hand, found it impossible to sleep, and, lighting his pipe, stole quietly out of the house and down to the peach orchard to walk under the fragrant smoke of it, and he wistfully watched the light dimly reflected on the white curtain of Neva's window.

He had often paced thus and watched that window for long hours after the household was hushed and its inmates were lost in the dim land of shadowy dreams.

To-night he watched it rather mystified. He never known that light to last so long. Had Neva dropped off into slumber and forgotten to extinguish it? While this thought was racking his brain, he saw her pass to and fro between the light and the curtain.

"Why is she so restless at this hour?" he wondered.

For some time longer he paced up and down under the trees, smoking his pipe and watching the shadow on the curtain. Suddenly the candle went out, and the farm-house was wrapped in gloom.

"Good-night to you, little Neva, and pleasant dreams," he murmured, reverently, raising his hat and baring his head to the cool night winds. His pipe went out, and knocking out the ashes and dead embers, he placed it in his pocket and walked slowly to the house and to his room.

If he had but remained in the peach orchard but a little longer, he would have witnessed a strange sight, and have saved the girl he loved from a future as cruel as death, but fate had ordained that they was not to be.

Slowly time crept on—the time which to some of us seems all too slow and which, in looking backward in after years, we would give the world if we could but live over. Ere the last strokes of the old clock had died away on the summer air, the door of Neva's room opened ever so softly, and, cloaked and hooded, the girl stole out into the passage-way.

At the door of the old folks' room she paused and kneeling down, laid her fresh warm lips to the threshold over which their dear feet must pass.

"Good-bye, mother and dear old father," she murmured, crying softly. "I am going to join him with whom my life is to be henceforth passed and forever. It seems like tearing my heart-strings to leave you like this, but it is to only for a little while, and then we will come back together, my dear young husband and I, and kneel to you and pray you to find pardon for us." Sobbing hurriedly while she still had the strength and resolution to go, Neva fled from the house, kissing her little white hand to it in token of fondness, and praying Heaven to be kind to them.

The girl sped swiftly across the clover meadow and through the peach orchard to the barn; reaching it, she opened the door softly.

Then she had the house to step, and sprung at the intruder with a low, horrible growl, but as soon as he recognized her he recognized her, even before she spoke, and his low growls turned quickly to antics of delight at her presence.

Neva led her favorite horse, turned in his stall and looked at her. Speaking to him in low, whispered tones, she went up to him and caressed him hurriedly; and while she did so, Timonty, the colt, whinied loudly for recognition and a pat on the nose from the white hand that brought him sugar.

Softly, Neva led Robin out into the stillness of the summer night, holding her hand on the bridle a moment ere she mounted, to take one last, long, lingering glance around her. The night was like a beautiful poem. Ah! how dear the old farm-house looked, almost covered with the nodding, blossoming purple wisteria vines and the clambering white roses! Her eyes filled as they roamed slowly, wistfully over the orchard, pink and white with the blossoms that gave promise of early fruitage, the clover meadow and the corn-field stretching far beyond.

"Good-bye, dear old home, for a little while," she murmured, tremulously. "Ere another moon has waned, I will be back again with my —my—husband."

How dear, how sweet and tender that last word seemed to her! It repressed to her all that made life beautiful and worth the living. Springing into the saddle, Neva touched Robin with her whip, and away they flew down the graveled walk to the main road, for she remembered she had a hard ride before her if she would reach the village, twenty miles distant, in time to catch the train.

As she passed through the gate she turned in the saddle and took one long, lingering look backward.

Even the tall hollyhocks, waving their graceful golden heads to and fro in the night wind, seemed to send her a solemn and sad farewell as she turned away from them.

It was a long ride, but Neva reached the village at last.

"Now, Robin, I must send you back," she murmured, springing from the saddle as she reached the depot. "You will have a long, long journey home again, but you will not mind it, free from all restraint." So saying, she turned his head about, gave him a quick, sharp cut with her riding-whip, and the next instant he had disappeared around the bend of the road.

Neva found, as she timidly entered the waiting-room of the depot, that the village was in a stir, for the passengers were pressing hurriedly about the ticket office, eager to secure their bill of passage, for already the shriek of the incoming train could be heard in the distance.

"Quick, miss! you'd better be quick in buying your ticket," said the station agent, nodding impatiently to Neva. "I have to close this window at once to see to the baggage."

All in an instant the girl grew bewildered, her brain commenced to fairly whirl, and she seem to grow stifling; and in that terrible moment of the place Glendenning had told her she must buy her ticket for slipped from her memory.

"I have quite forgotten the name of the place," she gasped, piteously; "it is New—New—something, and a great way off."

"Is it New Haven, Newburyport, New York—"

"Oh, that's the place!" Cried Neva, joyously. "I knew it was New something, and had a Y to it."

The sum he wanted for the ticket fairly staggered Neva. Glendenning had told her that it would be so much; indeed, she had understood him to say that it would be but a few dollars.

It took nearly all the money she had in her purse, all save some twenty or thirty dollars.

She did not have time to think much over the matter, as the train came thundering pantingly up to the station at that moment, and she had barely time to board it ere it swept out into the soft silvery moonlight of the night again bearing her onward into the mysterious, shadowy future and she was en route for New York, instead of the little village of New Yeddo, to which Glendenning had instructed her to go, and where he was impatiently awaiting her.

An hour and a half later the train whirled by New Yeddo. The moon had long since hidden her sad face behind a cloud, and that darkness which precedes the dawn had spread like a dark pall over the earth.

There were no passengers for that village, and the train made no stops, but rushed madly through it.

Glendenning, standing there, watching eagerly and jovially, grew white as death as he stood looking after it until a curve in the road hid it from his sight.

"Neva did not come!" he exclaimed, wonderingly, to Himself. "What is the reason, I wonder?"

For three days he haunted the depot, watching each incoming train; then slowly but surely it began to dawn upon him that she was not coming.

"She must have been too frightened at the prospect, when she came to think the matter over, to take the journey alone," he thought.

Then he was on the telegraphing to her, he knew, and the only way left him to pursue was to write to the nearest village, one which he had told her to take the train from, and wait patiently until she went there after it and replied to it.

"What would I do without certainty," he argued, and it occurred to him that he could not put in the time better than by going somewhere to seek employment. His funds were running pretty low, and he would have to find something to do to support his young bride.

With a sad heart, Glendenning took the next express for Philadelphia. As the train steamed into the city he arose from his seat mechanically and pushed out with the crowd; but he had barely set his foot on the first step of the train ere a harsh hand forward and he was precipitated violently to the platform.

A curse from his lips as he lay there white as death, the warm blood pouring from a gash in the forehead.

There was an old medical professor present, and strong quickly forward to Glendenning's side.

"Is he dead?" cried every one in a breath.

"He is in a precarious condition," exclaimed the doctor, after a hasty examination. "If his life can be saved it will be by a miracle. He has sustained severe internal injuries and concussion of the brain."

CHAPTER XII.

Oscar Glendenning was quickly removed to a hotel across the way, where he proved his identity, and all the assistance in his power; but, despite all his efforts, and the efforts of the council of doctors that were hastily summoned, the stranger sunk rapidly.

They were greatly troubled over him for there was nothing whatever about him to reveal his identity, and if they failed to bring him to consciousness for even a few moments to tell the whereabouts of his friends they would be obliged to bury him in a nameless grave.

At length their strenuous exertions were rewarded. He opened his eyes in a dazed way, looked in bewilderment about him, and at the strange faces around his bedside.

"What is the matter?" he asked, struggling to gain a sitting posture; but he fell back with a terrible groan of excruciating pain, and before they could answer him, he went on: "Oh, I could have taken the train from the step of the engine!—I gave a heave! Have I sustained any serious injury? I—I want to know the truth—I must know it!"

The doctors looked at one another, and one of them made a sign to his companions, and then turned to Glendenning, saying:

"It is better that you know the truth and the worst. Your case is beyond all earthly aid. You are sinking rapidly with each fast-fleeting moment. When the reverend gentleman who is administering to you has done with his ministrations he will be into an unconscious state again, and then you will pass away."

"You are quite sure?" breathed Glendenning, hoarsely.

They all bowed assent.

A great sob broke from his white lips, and he covered his face with his hands that shook and trembled like aspen leaves.

"If you have anything you wish to say, any friends you wish notified, it would be well to mention the fact while you have strength and reason and ability. Every moment is precious to you."

How strange it was that in this fatal hour, while his soul lingered between life and death, all remembrance of the young wife whom he had wedded, and whom he loved so well, was completely obliterated from his mind, as though she had never existed. He remembered only the forged check, and that Roger, his brother, had promised to try and raise the money for him, and had gone back on that promise; and in his terror he had fled from New York, and had never known another moment of peace from that hour to this, because of the haunting dread, by night and by day, that he was being hunted down, and that sooner or later the minions of the law would controll him, and the end would be a prison cell, dank and lone, during all the best years of his life, to be freed when he was old and feeble and all chance of making something for his old age out of the question.

He would be old, feeble, and a pauper, and death would be a blessing to him, the prolongation of life a curse.

"Have you any friends with whom you would like to communicate?" the clergyman again, and he replied:

"I have only a brother, Roger Glendenning, private secretary to Judge Kneeland, of New York," he said, faintly, speaking with great difficulty. "Telegraph him, if you will, my estimable, kind-hearted some one of you kindly write to Judge Kneeland, of New York, after all is over and tell him that I am sorry I forged that check on him for one thousand dollars, imitating my brother Roger's handwriting in making it out. You are signing—"

Those around him listened in wonder, looking at one another in great surprise, for they were all newspaper readers, and had read of the bold forgery of Roger Glendenning, private secretary to Judge Kneeland, of New York, and now to hear the man who called himself Oscar Glendenning admit that he was the guilty one was rather astounding.

A magistrate was sent for without a moment's delay, and his deposition taken, together with a full confession of the affair.

Gently they broke the story to the dying man that his brother was accused of the crime, and that he had made no denial, and suffered arrest for it.

"Great God!" cried Oscar, his breath coming and going in great gasps, "now I know why he did not keep his appointment with me. He could not meet the money, and took the crime upon his own shoulders to—to save me. Noble Roger! oh, I pray you, in the last of my dying declaration and solemn confession, set him free—set him free quickly, for he is as innocent of it as I babe unborn. The check was mine, mine only, too, why he—he endeavored to—to save me from Judge Kneeland's wrath. He were quite his voice now scarcely above an audible whisper. "I—I told Roger that only that day the judge's daughter had promised to re-convey me the money to pay off the note I had forged, and I—I believed he would get the money somehow to—to—save me from his employer's wrath."

A host of babies will enjoy sound sleep tonight. And their parents will have unbroken rest. Cause: Castoria is the cause of this contentment in a multitude of homes.

Good old Castoria! Children cry for it. Mothers swear by it. Not a household where there is an infant should ever be without it. A few drops of Castoria quiet Baby in a perfectly innocent manner. It is natural slumber that follows. Castoria is a purely vegetable product. No opiates. No narcotics. Of any kind.

Now you know why trained nurses give Castoria as a tonic as an infant is ailing, or even restless. And why doctors tell mothers it is the first and only home remedy when Baby has constipation, colic, diarrhea, or other ills that is made for babies, and safe to give babies, and other things are not.

Therefore Castoria is "tailor-fashioned" if you count its fifty years, but it's an old-fashioned mother, nowadays, who worries long without it. Over five million bottles bought last year! Think of the number of mothers who rely on Castoria! Children, mothers can't be wrong! To keep a bottle in the house is a precaution you owe your little one.

WANT TO APPEAR YOUNG

Introduction of Sports and Games Help to Make People So—Life's Best Work After Middle Age.

Most people of the present generation who have reached middle life as they think back on their early years and remember the several states of mind in which they considered their parents, their parents' conduct, wisdom, mannerisms, etc, will recall the change at that time was very much more awesome than it is in these days, writes Dr. Casmus H. Watson in the Blue Bell. Parents had considerable more dignity. Austerity was the rule rather than familiarity. Their intercourse one with another and with their children was dignified to a degree. They were accustomed to being looked up to by their children. They had a well-marked sense of their own importance. They took themselves very seriously. They created an artificial limit to their own field of accomplishment beyond which, in a way, it was not considered good form to go.

We of this generation in the smugness of our middle age like to feel that we have not grown old, but can still reach back and do many of the things of the day of youth. And I think we do. The principle of middle age are now much younger than they were a generation ago. The introduction of sports and games, the character of dress and the opportunities to do things that are young and the encouragement offered to undertake ventures of activity in recreation help to make them so. Both men and women are now trying to appear young. The smooth face has been accepted as has been the bobbed hair. The youthful character of clothing makes for activities which our forbears would have thought undignified and improper.

People want to appear young and they want to be thought young, and in the background of their thoughts they want to feel that mentally they have remained young. Still, we see some people who think themselves old who glory in their age for certain purposes. They are overcome with a sense of inferiority at the attitude of youth even though they may fully comprehend the superficial nature of the activity of the youth about them.

As a matter of fact, when we think of real accomplishment in the world, it has not all been confined to younger years. Those things which have been produced that are most lasting can only be produced after age and experience have had their opportunities to weld together and mould the results of experience in proper form. It is true that discoveries and inventions and many of the things that are new are the productions of the early years. But, if you stop to think of the great literary and artistic accomplishments, most of the best things have been done at or some time after middle life. The great philosophies could never have been formulated by the young mind. Mature judgment, which only follows after experience and contact with the things of the world, is a production of years.

TRINITY CHURCH

Trinity United Church.

During the past week the dining hall of Trinity United church has been undergoing extensive repairs under the management of the Ladies' Aid Society. A new wainscoting of B. C. fir has been put in and the doors and window ledges grained to harmonize. The ceiling has been freshly painted while the walls are stippled in shades of buff, tan and blue. The pantry and kitchen have also been freshly painted and kalsomined, and altogether the spacious dining hall and adjoining rooms present a most attractive appearance, and the ladies much credit on the committee of management. Mr. W. D. Pennell and Mr. Percy Madden, Napanee, had charge of the work.

FRIDAY EVENING NEXT

Died at London.

Word was received in Napanee on Thursday last announcing the death in London, Ont., of Miss Carrie Hooper. The deceased, who for the past few years had been residing with her sister, Mrs. Detlor, in London, was born in Newburgh, being the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Hooper. After the death of her father she and her mother resided in Napanee. After her mother's death she made her home with her sisters, Mrs. George Thompson, Toronto, and Mrs. Detlor, London. She was exceptionally well-known and highly respected by a wide circle of friends, both in Napanee and Newburgh, who will regret to learn of her passing. Deceased was a sister of Mr. F. L. Hooper, proprietor of the Medical Hall. The remains arrived in Napanee on Friday. Interment took place at Riverside cemetery.

Wedding Chimes.

A very pretty autumn wedding was solemnized at high noon, on Thursday, Nov. 1st, 1928, in Manson United Church, Alberta, of Lylie Neota, an ex-student of Garbutt Business College, Calgary, and only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Preston Hooper, to John Rae Hambly, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Irvine Hambly, of White Star Ranch, Munson, Alberta, by Rev. J. V. Howey of that church. This was the first wedding in this new church. The mother of the bride has been organist in two different churches. The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, William, was charming in her wedding gown of white crepe romain decked with hand-painted roses, silver kid slippers and stockings to match. Her costume was complete with a rope of pearls, the groom's gift, also embroidered silk bridal veil and orange blossoms with long wax gloves. She carried a bouquet of roses and lily of the valley with maiden hair fern, tied with a cupid bow. Mrs. Sibbald, organist, softly played the wedding march as the bride entered the church. Several guests and friends were in attendance. Following the ceremony pictures were taken, and a dainty luncheon was served at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Gibb, a former Picton, Ont. girl. The bride's table was centred with the wedding cake, other decorations being yellow roses and yellow lighted candles. Friends, Mrs. Walrod and Mrs. Lavers were in attendance cutting the ices. Here the guests had an opportunity of viewing the handsome array of gifts, testimonies of the popularity of the bridal couple. Mr. and Mrs. Hambly left for Calgary and other points amid showers of rice and good wishes, being followed by many costume was a smart affire of blue and gold.

Mr. Husband, is 80 years of age and his brother, Robert Husband, of Coxvale, aged 84 years, was present. A dainty lunch of ice cream, sandwiches, cake, pie, candies and fruit was served by Mr. George Husband, Mrs. Amos Townsend and Mrs. Fred Martin. The tables were beautifully decorated with flowers and a lovely three storey birthday cake with 80 candles on it, made by Mrs. George Husband, centred the table. Mr. Husband is the youngest of the family of the late Robert Husband and Abigal Barrett and was born and has lived all his life on that farm. Mr. Husband received many nice presents, including a lovely oak rocker with leather cushion from his family. After singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," the friends departed, wishing Mr. Husband many more happy birthdays.

Ten Years In Hospitals

How would you like to spend her years of your life in hospitals? Perhaps you would be glad to if you had no other home. Most of the inmates of the hospital offered the only chance of staying alive. Mrs. Patrick has been living this way for years. Her trouble? Common enough—tuberculosis, and she is poor and almost friendless. Her present stay at the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives has done her so much good, however, that she believes she will stay out for good when she leaves. She is anxious to get away to a quiet life in some small town, perhaps to open a small millinery shop. The excellent treatment she has been getting has put new life and new hope in Mrs. Patrick, but, of course, she and so many hundreds of others who have spent their last cent in the search for health must be helped by warm-hearted friends. A contribution from you would be greatly appreciated.

Such may be sent to Hon. W. A. Charlton or A. E. Ames, 223 College Street, Toronto 2, Ontario.

"He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings; and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me. These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you. But the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said I go unto the Father; for my Father is greater than I. And now I have told you before it came to pass that when it come to pass ye might believe. Hereafter I will not talk much unto you: for the prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me. But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment even so I do. Arise, let us go hence." John 14: 24-31.

Sure I must fight if I would reign; Increase my courage Lord, I'll bear the toil, endure the pain, Supported by Thy word.

PLANS WAR ON RATS

U. S. Government Estimates Damage Done Yearly at $200,000,000.

A war to exterminate the rat which it estimates is costing the American public about $200,000,000 annually in damage done to property destroyed, is being waged by the United States Public Health service.

Conservative figures, the health service says place the rat population of the United States at 120,000,000 and while the ratio of increase in certain places is believed to be much higher, while in localities where rodents are kept under control, the rat population has been considerably reduced.

If the prolific breeding of rats were not combated by all means at hand, economics, and cannibalistic tendencies of the animal, the world would soon be overrun and man himself forced to fight a losing battle for scraps of food, it added.

"The general unawareness of a condition which has confronted the proportions of a grave national problem," the health service declared, is proof of the marvelous resourcefulness and cunning of the rat. What other dangerous and destructive animals could have lived so long in such close proximity to man with so little being made itself so seriously obnoxious as to excite a wave of resentment leading to speedy extermination?

"In the age-old fight for survival the rat has learned lessons of sagacity, patience, and agility which fit it well for a contest in which man must exercise his ingenuity to the utmost if he would win."

Direct measures of attack, the health service believes, have but a limited usefulness in the hands of the public, but suppressive measures offer the best means of exterminating the rat. Rat proofing, the most effective measure is to separate the rat from its customary food supply and the health service recommends that food be kept in rat-proof containers wherever food-stuffs are stored.

Elimination of hiding places also makes life more difficult for the rat, which, it is pointed out, has not one single redeeming feature. The elimination of hiding places and starvation are said to offer the two most feasible methods open to the public to restrict breeding of rats.

MASTERS-TIERNEY UNDERTAKERS
FOR MOTOR EQUIPMENT
WELLINGTON AND CHURCH STREETS

Queen of Belgian Queen Is Master Glass Worker.

France has a master woman glass-worker who believes that the medieval artisans had the right idea. She is Miss Marguerite Hure, a French woman in her early thirties and a protege of the Queen of Belgium.

Miss Hure's working plan is simple. First she gets the idea, then the execution with her own hands, even if they get dirty. In making the stained glass windows which she has placed in French churches, both old and modern, Miss Hure has not hesitated in applying her theories. Dressed in overalls and a flannel shirt, she goes right after her job. Sometimes it is a dizzy one atop the scaffolding in a church, where there are precious windows hundreds of years old to be repaired. At other times it is designing on a huge scale, or glass cutting, or leading in a studio full of grimy devices that took too heavy for a woman to handle.

France hails her as the world's only woman master glass-worker. There are women who design stained glass windows for other people to execute and there are other women who execute windows after the designs of another person. But of women who both design and execute stained glass windows there is only one, her countrymen say, and that one is their Marguerite Hure.

The stained glass windows of Chartres, which she loved as a child, supplied the key to Miss Hure's life. She talks little about herself or about anything else, preferring action to talk, but thinks that what modern art needs is less industrialism and a bigger architectural conception. Not bigger in the sense of the higher or wider, but more sublime and less influenced by the past.

CANADIAN WOMEN'S WORK

BY LUCINDA.

What about voting ? It will not be long before the municipal elections are the topic of the day and the question of the women's vote is one being considered by the candidates. Don't let the men say with truth that the women's franchise means only that there are two votes in a house for the same man, where there was only one when the man of the house alone had the vote. Think for yourself and decide who is the best man, the man who will uphold the best standard of morality in your town, the man who will see that the poorest voter will have as good a chance as his richer neighbor and that the best interests of the community will be served. When women got the vote they got an added responsibility and they cannot get out of it by doing just what someone says. No matter if you didn't ask for it, you have it now. Then there are all the unmarried women who are on the voters' lists, women over the age of twenty-one. No matter if their twenty-first birthday has just passed, the vote and the responsibility is theirs. Don't get frightened when you think of it and stay at home; don't be too lazy to think matters out for yourself. Take the matter seriously and cast your vote for the best men.

How would you like to have a hand that you could insure for $10,000 ? That is what Miss Marie Foster, the Canadian woman who has made such a name as a sculptor has done. Miss Foster has a studio in Toronto and says she will feel much safer now in handling her chisel. She is at present working at Niagara Falls, on stone adornments for a millionaires new home.

How lovely are the party frocks this season ! The girls look like flowers, some one says, especially chrysanthemums, with their tight bodices and full skirts, with pointed panels and drapes of lace or georgette. The light skirts float gaily as the girl dances, and gives a flower-like effect that is very charming. Three flowers may be worn on the shoulder, one at least towards the back to show when dancing.

Kemptville was the place, as usual, where the girls of Eastern Ontario farms met for their annual conference last week. Judging competitions and lectures and demonstrations of various kinds fill up three hapy days and each girl has gone home to set in practice the hints picked up at the conference. We will hear from them later, for they will begin to make pleasant programs for entertainments and bring useful and interesting ideas to their community.

How pretty the pleated shades for lamps are ? And how easy you can have anything you like made into a lamp standard. We saw one perfectly charming lamp made from an old white bronze stand upon which had been the bowl that held the oil in coal oil lamp it had been. The figure was good and the bowl removed, it had been painted in delicate shades of ivory, pink and blue and looked just like a Dresden china figure. With it was a shade in ivory with flowered baskets on each panel. Most of us have old things about the house which we could use with a bit of ingenuity.

Do you remember the little velvet jackets you found in the chest in the attic where great-grandmother or mother of you or of an older generation had carefully folder them away ? Well jackets much like them are to be worn this season, but with a variation of course. One costume shown at a New York fashion parade featured a silver jacket in straight lines with long sleeves worn over a black georgette gown with a skirt fairly short in front and touching the ground at the back. For afternoon teas and bridge parties the little jackets are often of velvet, plain or figured.

Last Thursday we were invited to visit the Ernestown branch of the Women's Institute, held in the United Church, the pretty little church on a hill. Here we found the meeting in charge of Mrs. F. Hamm, the president, and also the president of the district of Lennox. Being a few minutes late we found Mrs. A. P. Young, of Bath, Secretary-treasurer of the district giving a paper upon home influence, to which we listened with great pleasure. The home is the place where one gets fine practice in living, said the speaker, and went on to tell how audience that children naturally imitate their parents and in a home where consideration for others is shown, the children also grow up in that atmosphere are courteous and carry that courtesy out into the world. On the homes of the country hangs much of the future development of Canada. Mrs. Frederick Etherington, president of the Kingston Local Council, with which Ernestown W. I. is affiliated, is also convenor of the Foundation Fund of the National Council of Women and spoke of the benefit to the women of the country as a whole, of this great organization to which 200,000 women of Canada belong and the advantage of the women of the rural districts and the city women meeting together to discuss their problems. Miss A. M. Going, of Kingston, said that the Kingston Local Council had gone over the top in its campaign to raise $3,000 for the Foundation Fund, having to date $3,700, with more coming in from the sixteen branches of the W. I. of Lennox and Frontenac, which are among the affiliated societies. Much interest was shown in the jelly contest and the prize jelly made by Mrs. Young, Jr., was carried home with pride by Mrs. Etherington. We were given the recipe, which we use today. Tea was served with delicious sandwiches and cake.

* * *

Here is the jelly recipe from which the amber jelly was made : Take as many Duchess apples as you wish, remove blossom and stem and quarter. Wash, but do not peel the apples. Cover with water and boil until soft. Strain over night through a jelly bag, add a pound of sugar to a pint of juice. Boil the juice twenty minutes then put in the sugar and boil from two to five minutes, skimming the froth away. Test by cooling till the jelly jells. Pour into sterilized glasses.

THIS MAN is putting up telephone poles. Early in the morning he is out making a way for the wire that is to come. At night when the gang gets back to camp he is tired.

But he likes it. There is zest in the work he is doing, for he is in new country. There have never been telephones here before.

He is blazing the trial. After him will come families and homes and stores and factories to make another city. Over the wires on the poles he plants there will be voices and laughter, business will hum, all the world will draw closer.

He works with magic. The wire transforms time and distance. Today you can lift the telephone at your elbow and within seven minutes hear the voice of your friend in England say : "Are you there?"

THIS MAGIC in the telephone has not come in a day. It has come with year after year of experiment and improvement. The telephone of today is no more like the first telephone than a machine gun is like a bow-and-arrow.

And the telephone of tomorrow will surpass the telephone of today. Tomorrow perhaps, this telephone at your elbow will bring you the face of the person you talk with, will hold new magic we now do not dream of.

THIS IS the urge to improve—to seek and to find something always better—which has been the definite policy of the telephone business since the first crude instrument reproduced the voice of its inventor fifty-odd years ago.

By no other policy could the telephone have kept pace with this country or contributed to its progress as it has done in reducing Canada's wide distances and differences of geography.

And by no other policy can the telephone now meet the responsibility of serving Canada's future.

CANADA'S FUTURE is at least twenty years of unprecedented growth and prosperity. All the signs and barometers of business point to it. All the shrewdest prophets of business predict it.

The signs and the prophets are so sure, and the future is so unmistakable, that within the next five years more money will be needed for extension of the telephone system in Ontario and Quebec than was spent by the business in all its first forty years.

THE MAN pushing poles and wire into new country and the foresight which now is planning over one hundred million dollars of new plant to meet the needs of the next five years come from the same policy and the same purpose—to give Canadians facilities of communication worthy of their country and its future.

Published by The Bell Telephone Company of Canada to tell you something about the telephone business and the people in it.

HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

DISINFECTION.

So many inquiries have been made concerning the disinfection of a room or house after a case of communicable disease has occurred, that the matter is chosen for the subject of this article.

The objective of disinfection is to destroy the germs which cause disease. Disease germs grow only inside the human or animal body. They leave the body of the sick in discharges and secretions of the body. Once outside of the body, the germs die off—most of them very quickly. Drying and sunlight are nature's methods of destroying these enemies. Dark, damp corners delay nature's action.

Concurrent disinfection is the term used to mean the disinfection that is carried on during a disease. It aims, by prompt disinfection of the body discharges and secretions, to destroy the disease germs they contain before there is any chance of their coming in contact with some well person. The eating utensils are disinfected to destroy the germs in the saliva that is left on cups, spoons, etc., by the diseased person. Concurrent disinfection is most important and must be thoroughly carried out until the patient has recovered.

Terminal disinfection is the term used to mean the disinfection after recoved of the patient. If Concurrent Disinfection has been properly observed, there is no need of Terminal Disinfection, because all the secretions will have been looked after. This is the point which needs to be clearly understood ; proper care during the disease prevents its spread. To try and kill off a few germs that may have survived in a room, after the recovery of a patient, is a matter of practically no importance compared with the need for destruction of the millions of germs given off during the course of the disease.

Terminal Disinfection has been discontinued in many cities, and all attention given to Concurrent Disinfection.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered by letter. Questions as to diagnosis and treatment will not be answered.

Secured It From Adversary.

Two Spaniards quarrelled and decided to fight a duel.

In order to do this without attracting too much attention, they took a train into the country.

The first Spaniard booked a return ticket, but his opponent took only a single.

"Caramba!" exclaimed the first, "You expect not to come back—eh, my friend? I always get a return."

"I never do," answered the other quite calmly. "I always take the return half from my adversary."

Unusual Elections.

Twice in the history of the United States a Presidential candidate has received a majority of the popular vote and been defeated by the electoral vote. The most famous was the disputed election of 1876, when Samuel J. Tilden received 4,284,885 votes and Hayes 4,033,950, but Hayes was declared elected. In 1888, Cleveland had 5,540,329 popular votes and Harrison 5,439,853, but Harrison was elected by 233 electoral votes to 168.

Metallic hats....gleaming with light....cut in cunning little shapes that hug the head and snuggle down closely over the ears.

Velvet hats....rich....luxurious....with the vogue for brightness mirrored in their smart, metallic trims.

THE PENNY MIRACLE

Starting a Modern Newspaper To-day Is No Mean Job, Says Old Country Periodical.

Would you care to start a new daily or weekly paper in London? asks Tit-Bits.

If so, and you have about £250,000 handy, round your building, recruited a large staff, arranged with the news agencies, linked your office by wire, cable, radio, and airplane with every corner of the earth, then all you have to do is to obtain your printing press and go ahead. The latter item will cost you—if you select the latest type—£100,000.

Your order for a 15-unit rotary press will give full-time employment to at least 500 mechanics for four months, while many of that number will be engaged in erecting the new giant for as long as nine months.

The main feature of your 400-ton purchase consists of fifteen sets of rollers which are termed units. You can have as many units as the length of your building will permit. In them stereo plates are fixed, and the paper, passing over them, is printed.

Between every three or four units is an apparatus rather like a weaving loom, that is known as a folder. This explains itself; it cuts, folds and folds again the long strip of paper which is the original form of every newspaper.

Mention of the paper will probably cause you to hunt for the huge reels that feed the press. You will find them under your feet, in a special compartment below the level of the press. Here the giant reels are set up in threes on turrets which, as each reel is consumed, automatically turn until the next reel is in position. Your reels weigh 14 cwt. each, and there are five miles of paper on every reel. As your 15-unit machine will consume 189 such reels in one night's printing, you will understand that to pace the length of paper used would be a very long walk! And this is only one machine; some newspapers use from three to six.

In mere bulk, for instance, a single issue of the News of the World (London, England) takes 500 tons of paper!

The printing cylinders revolve at the rate of 18,000 revolutions an hour, and print two copies of your paper at each turn. Thus each folder can handle 36,000 copies an hour, while your entire machine can print in one hour 180,000 copies of a 24-page journal or 252,000 copies of a 16-page paper.

Attached to the folders are wire conveyers which seize the folded copies and pass them up out of the printing room, round corridors, through several floors, if necessary, to the desk where the despatch clerks are waiting to pack them up in bundles for the newsboys.

If you are wise, you will equip your machine with one of the latest non-stop Late News devices. News that is received later than that printed in the body of the paper necessitates the stopping of the press while the extra matters is inserted. All this may take two minutes, time for your rival to have all the news on the streets. The new device enables football and racing results, and other late news, to be inserted without stopping the press. Only one newspaper in London has this at present.

Finally, your 15-unit press will occupy a space 160 feet long, 15 feet wide, and 24 feet high; it will require approximately thirty men to run it; will consume 60 drums of ink, each weighing a hundredweight, every night, and will need electric motors to drive it with a total force of 375 horsepower. And, if you are lucky, your paper will sell for exactly one penny.

Insects Prefer Blondes.

Mosquitoes are more apt to bite people with fair skins than those of dark complexion.

Old-Age Pension for Russia.

Old age pensions for peasants are a possibility, if ever anxious to keep favor with the land, the council of people's commissars has recommended to the central executive committee a decree by the provinces of which, if it is approved, every peasant over 65 years of age will receive a pension from the State amounting to 40 roubles ($25) per year. This is approximately the average annual wage received by a rural workman. It is hoped to put the proposal into effect by 1929-30, when, it is estimated, 267,000 peasants in Great Russia alone will receive the pension.

EMPEROR'S SCHOOLING.

His Majesty Bao Dai, Aged 14, Has Paris "Office" to Finish Education.

A special regime has been instituted for the educatalon of the 14-year-old Emperor of Annam. His Majesty Bao Dai, who is completing his schooling in Paris and French resorts before assuming his hereditary rights in France's distant possession.

Bao Dai does not have to sit at the ordinary schoolroom desk of other pupils. Instead he has a modern office in his private apartment. All of his lessons are taken privately, professors selected by the Governor-General supplementing those of the Lycee Condorcet in daily visits to the youthful ruler.

There is a special "precepteur," who must not only report weekly to the Government but also to the boy's relatives. Bao Dai may wish to play football with his fellow-students, whom he sees only when they happen to pass beneath his windows on their way home, but "protocole" must be observed.

His only compensation is that he does not have to write out his "home work." Occasional verbal examinations are sufficient. When he becomes Emperor of Annam he will have a whole staff of professors at his disposal to solve any important problems.

On the other hand, he does not have the satisfaction of French schoolboys, for there is no public presentation of "prizes"—usually volumes of inspiring philosophy or Jules Verne's tales—the imperial crown of Annam being considered sufficient reward for any degree of precocity.

On the records of the Lycee Condorcet, which will eventually give him a diploma, Bao Dai appears as "Vinh Thuy." He is said to be especially fond of arithmetic, but has considerable difficulty handling the French tongue. His favorite tutor is former Governor Charles of Indo-china, who will probably return with him to Annam as an official counsellor.

In another aristocratic lyceum or high school is registered Si Hoeran Hulla, the eldest son of the King of Afghanistan. He follows the lectures, however, like any French boy. "He's just one of us," is the compliment his schoolmates pay him. They admit that they envy his ability to master Latin, for, despite only three years of study, he is several books ahead of most of his classmates.

AN ODD COUPLE.

Husband Three Feet Tall Has Six-Foot Wife.

One of the oddest couples in the world must be Mr. and Mrs. Gustchalk, of Berlin. The wife is six feet; her husband, just half this height. Although so different physically, they get along very well together, and what Herman lacks in inches he makes up in years, for he is thirty-eight years old and Mina only nineteen.

Their love story reads like a fanciful book romance. Herman was a midget at a circus and used to sell pictures of himself. Mina bought one of these and began to chat with him. Finding him interesting and amusing, she wrote to him, and for several months they exchanged letters. Herman sending her picture postcards inscribed "I wish you were here."

He proposed to her by post, was accepted, and in a short time married. Herman is growing perceptibly, but Mina hopes he won't grow too tall. She thinks he's too cute for anything!

BORING UNDER LAKE

Tunnel Blasted Three Miles Through Rock to Connect New Crib—Chicago's Water System.

As soon as the new tunnel has been blasted nearly three miles through solid rock under Lake Michigan, Chicago's new $4,000,000 "drinking cup" will begin pouring 700,000,000 gallons of water every 24 hours into the city's faucets and hydrants.

This almost inexhaustible flow of water will come in through the sides of the "cup" down through the big hole in the middle and into the tunnel 190 feet below the surface of the lake.

Only about a sixth of Chicago's water requirements will be met by the new equipment. Six similar cups, technically known as cribs, are now in operation. One of these known as the Two-Mile Crib, is to be abandoned when the new one starts operation. The old crib is too close inshore, getting contaminated water which requires a lot of processing to clean.

The new crib was assembled near shore, at the foot of the Navy pier. With its 700 tons of steel hull floated by compressed air, it was towed out alongside the old Carter Harrison crib, and there sunk. Thirty-five feet of its base will be below the water line. It is being set in concrete, and will have a rim and 20-foot superstructure of solid granite erected upon it.

Owing to the shallow water off Chicago's shore line, this city has an almost unique problem in getting good water. Other lake cities, it is reported, get cleaner water from much deeper cribs and do not have to go to the expense of building something on top that looks nice, according to Loran D. Gayton, city engineer, under whose direction the new crib was built.

Only Cleveland has an exposed crib like those at Chicago and it only has one, all its other intakes being submerged. Chicago has found it but into the lake, from two to four miles, to get its water, due to industrial and shipping contamination inshore.

This new crib, which comes under the Department of Public Works, headed by Richard W. Wolfe, commissioner, will be a twin to the Carter Harrison crib, and will be connected by a bridge. The old crib has a capacity of about 200,000,000 gallons of water daily.

BELLS OF HISTORY.

First Bells Were Rather Shapeless Clay Vessels.

Man made bells of clay before he had taught himself the art of writing. His first efforts were rather shapeless clay vessels which gave off a pleasing resonance when struck. Savages wear bells as some of their chief ornaments. The early Israelites are mentioned by Moses, Isaiah and Zacharlah as using bells on the yokes of their horses, as decorations on the anklets worn by the women, and in the temples. The sound of a bell summoned the Roman citizens to temple or forum.

The Italian bishop, Paulinus of Nola, first used bells in Christian worship and about the year 400 A.D., the Pope decreed that there should be a bell in every Roman Catholic church tower.

The curfew bell, the angelus bell and the passing bell, have become a part of history and tradition. Many bells like the famous one of St. Mark's in Venice, were alarums to be rung only in time of danger.
